The Beecher-Tillon Trial

BROOKLYN, April 20.—Mr. Beecher resumed the witness stand upon the assembling of the Court this morning, looking in the best of spirts. Fullerton opened the proceedings by asking Beecher if, after a night's reflection, he was able to say whether he didn't regard Tilton's charges of the 13th of December, 1870, as made in good faith and believed by Tilton. Witness answered he could not say he thought that in a general way

Tilton believed it.

He thought Tilton, in the interview that night, made no charge excepting reading of his wile's confession. Fullerton then read from Beecher's statements, showing that he had said he believed Tilton supposed his wile's confession to be true, with additional charges. The letter of February 5, 1872, was then handed Beecher. In it Beecher speaks of his suffering tortures of the er speaks of his suffering tortures of the damned. Fullerton read the letter by paragraphs, and questioned Beecher on piace Saturday, May dist, with Mrs. Moulton.

He did not remember expressing great suffering, but did express great indignation, and denounced Titon as one treacherous and rotten to the root.

He had acted as a man that had suffered greatly and had tried to conceal the trouble. Witness did not remember lying on the sofa or being tucked in with an aighan. Witness did not deny the kissing part. Regarding Beecher's alleged visit to Moulton's on the 2d of June, 1872, which Beecher has tenaciously denied, counsel examined him at length.

Beecher detailed his week's doings as far as he could recollect, and denied that he was at Moulton's house. The alleged charges that were to be tried by the Plymouth Church were then read to Beecher and he denied having ever entrusted any person to break up the Deacon's meetings, and also denied having ever heard that one of the specifications he was charged with was a criminal intimacy with Mrs. Tilton.

Regarding the appointed Investigation Committee, Beecher said he suggested one of the names, and Shearman and Cleveland the others. The committee was appointed June 28, 1872, at witness' house. Witness remembered the publication of the Bacon letter, and knew that he appointed the committee a day or two after. Moulton had suggested a way to get rid of the Bacon letter.

Witness did not remember ever saying he had lost confidence in Moulton because he suggested no plan by which to get out of the difficulty of the Bacon letter. The conversation with E. J. Bowen was then introduced, and Beecher was appeared to the condition of the part of the Bacon letter.

get out of the difficulty of the Bacon letter. The conversation with E. J. Bowen was then introduced, and Beecher was asked if he ever told Bowen he thought "General Butler one of the greatest men in the country," and "that God Almighty only permitted two men like Butler and Moulton to be born in a century."

Beecher replied laughingly he never dreamed of such a conversation. Ful.

Moulton to be born in a century."

Beecher replied laughingly he never dreamed of such a conversation. Fullerton called witness to his journeying and walks with Mrs. Tilton, but witness denied emphatically that he ever went with Mrs. Tilton to any other house than her own, and that she did not accompany him to a New York photographer's to get his picture taken.

Recess was then announced.

It is considered probable that Beecher's cross-examination will be concluded this evening, and be followed by Cleveland to-morrow.

After thoroughly searching the premises the young men crept through the opening of the door where they had gained admittance and attempted to escape. They were interrupted by Mr. Trasher who ordered them to halt. This they did not do. Thrasher then fired at them, the shot taking effect on Stevenson, bringing him to the ground. A shot was also fired at Clark but with no effect. He was finally brought down by a stone. All the booty they obtained was about $80 worth of railroad tickets, which was found on their persons. Both parties are seriously wounded, and are now lying at the station in a critical condition. Stevenson is a son of Dr. Stevenson, one of the leading physicians of this city, who was very much horrified at hearing of the affair, and started immediately for DeMossville.
